EIGHTH ANNUAL SPRING SYMPOSIUM 2018 — Register Today!
Saturday, May 5, 2018

PROGRAM DESCRIPTION

The purpose of this course is to assess the clinical, legal, and ethical implications of the use of medical marijuana in long-term care by evaluating the current state of research pertinent to long-term care patients, identifying public health ramifications for care providers and various long-term care facilities, and understanding state and federal laws pertaining to the prescription of medical marijuana.

TARGET AUDIENCE

Medical Directors, Attending Physicians, Physician Assistants, Advance Practice Nurses, Directors of Nursing, Registered Nurses, Certified Nursing Assistants, Other Health Care Professionals Practicing in Long-Term Care

OBJECTIVES

At the conclusion of this activity, participants should be able to:

- Analyze the evidence base for medical marijuana, especially assessing the state of research related to the effects of medical marijuana in order to better understand the different formulations of marijuana and general dosing specifications
- Evaluate the public health issues concerning cannabis use among older persons, including epidemiology and health behaviors, and to appreciate how federal and state cannabis policies intersect with nursing, assisted, and other residential facilities for older adults
- Compare competing state and federal laws and identify potential legal issues, risks, and liabilities surrounding the administering and prescribing of medical marijuana in order to consider potential approaches to providing medical care in the medical marijuana context
